Factors associated with compliance to subcutaneous glatiramer acetate therapy in patients with multiple sclerosis. Treatment compliance is one of the most important determinants of the success of an intervention and has been an issue in many therapeutic trials for multiple sclerosis (MS). The objective of this study was to assess the compliance with subcutaneous (SC) glatiramer acetate (GA) in a cohort of MS patients. The cohort consisted of 1657 MS patients, treated with SC GA, who were followed up at the Multiple Sclerosis Center, at the Hospital dos Servidores Públicos do Estado de São Paulo, Brazil. The assessment of compliance was performed by phone interview with each patient, using a questionnaire which was applied every 6 months for 5 years. Patients were considered "compliant" if they had injected the drug more than 80% of the prescribed doses. In this retrospective study, we evaluated 3124 follow-up assessments, from January 1999 to December 2004. The average of the doses per visit was 7.4 mg (standard deviation [SD] 2.1) for the first year and 6.2 mg (SD 2.1) for the last year of the study. The study population was divided into 4 subgroups: compliant patients (CC); patients in which there was loss of the drug (LD); those who reinjected the drug (ID); and those who stopped treatment (SD). We observed an increase in the percentage of SD patients, from 25% in the first year to 34% in the last year of the study ($P = 0.01$). The most common reasons for discontinuation of therapy were personal reasons (34%), adverse effects (32%), inefficacy (21%) and lack of adherence (19%). After the logistic regression analysis, it was demonstrated that patients over 30 years of age ($OR = 1.6$;

95% CI, 1.04 to 2.48; $P = 0.03$), those from the Southeast region (OR = 1.82; 95% CI
