Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a light source for emitting radiation over a wide spectral range and a device for determining light-absorbing species in a gas mixture. 2. Description of the Prior Art The continuous, reproducible monitoring of the air pollution in a plant is becoming increasingly important from the point of view of safety, for example to avoid accidents which may lead to severe problems for the human beings and the plant. The light source employed in the monitoring system has to be as simple as possible and should have the following three essential properties: (a) an essentially monochromatic radiation (which should be selected to be approximately adjacent to, and slightly higher than, the absorption maximum of the gas component to be measured), PA1 (b) low power consumption (which is important to minimize overheating of the plant for safety reasons) and PA1 (c) a wide band emission (which makes it possible to simultaneously measure the concentration of a large number of gas components which have different absorption bands).
