We'll be rolling this out in a phased manner, and starting with Photoshop CC2021. As always, you're safe to use and won't see any changes. But after you've updated your software, there may be some things you should know. Phasing out Legacy GPGPU Alpha Features - In 2020, we announced the deprecation of GPU-based alpha-blending features in PS CC2020 and 2019. While these legacy features provided some benefits, they were also gradually becoming a major source of bugs and contributed to perf bottlenecks in the pipeline, causing users to experience stutter-like performance issues. On PS CC2021, we'll be phasing these features out by putting them behind the scenes. Now, you can expect to see new modern features that give you better rendering behavior. To note is, we'll continue to offer new PS CC2019 and PS CC2020 features release until the deprecation date, so get using the latest versions today! Visual Match Features For Saved GIFs - For users that have a large library of GIFs they've captured in the past, there may be some disappointment. In future releases, saving GIFs with visual match will no longer produce visual matches after saving. Since visual matches are most often only relevant to the GIFs in question, this helps limit the amount of GIFs that will show up in images with visual matches, and keep them from consuming needless resources. Uses New Native GPU Pipeline - On top of that, we'll be replicating the performance of the new native GPU pipeline on PS CC2021. We want to ensure that the native GPU pipeline is optimized for continued performance, as this will be the main feature of the software going forward.
