#Set's - Draft (There are a couple of guys at work on a new build engine that's going to solve these problems.. In the meantime I've made some. Michelle Hurd is a professor of sociology and the director of the Center for the Study of Urban Poverty and Culture at the University of Chicago.
In her book "Hanging in There: Living and Working in a Transforming Pittsburgh," Prof. Hurd reports on her seven-year stint as the director of the Economic Mobility Initiative, one of Pittsburgh's most innovative nonprofit community development organizations. Steel City in decline? Hurd, 75, grew up in Queens and arrived in Pittsburgh in 1976. She had spent her entire career as an academic, earning her PhD in social psychology in 1992 at the University of Texas, Austin. But when she arrived in Pittsburgh, she became increasingly concerned about the city's growing inequality and what she called "the invisibility of its service workers." She joined the Workforce Development Consortium, a group of private-sector organizations that worked to address workforce and economic development for underserved neighborhoods. "I started to look around Pittsburgh for the kinds of jobs I was interested in," she said, "and realized there was no one [job training organization] doing that work." So she decided to start her own. Her group, now called the Economic Mobility Initiative, made it
