Recently, hepatic cellular functions have been reproduced in long-term monolayer culture of hepatocytes. After dissociation of the cells by type IV collagenase, however, differentiation from epithelial cells into functional hepatocytes is delayed. The purpose of this study was to establish a novel long-term culture method for human hepatocytes. Hepatocytes were isolated from donated human liver by cell dissociation using type IV collagenase. The dissociated cells were plated at a density of  $2 \times 10^6$  cells/100-mm tissue culture plate or 50-mm dish and cultured in Williams' medium

(JCRB1039) supplemented with 10% fetal bovine serum and 1% antibiotic mixture. These culture conditions were kept constant throughout the experiment. The cells that remained as monolayer cultures were stained positive for cytokeratin 18 (CK18) by indirect immunofluorescence staining. When 100-mm dishes were cultured for up to one month, more than 50% of cells staining positive for CK18 were observed. We succeeded in obtaining a novel long-term culture system for human hepatocytes which might be maintained up to three months.1. Technical Field The present invention relates to a touch panel, an electrostatic capacity type touch panel and an input device. 2. Related Art Conventionally, there is a known electrostatic capacity type touch panel wherein an electrode pattern is formed on the upper surface of a substrate, a transparent sheet is disposed so as to face the upper surface of the substrate, and a cover sheet is
