From stories, to product, to nature's beauty, powerful elements like AI, machine learning, motion graphics and deep-learning, have transformed how we share our moments into true artistic expressions. The impact of it has been seen and felt in the shift in how we consume media, and it's prompting us to re-think how camera time is managed. At Adobe, we see the potential for a cultural revolution when photographers use Photoshop to marry camera time with their creativity. We see artistic masters such as Nick Brandt, who produces elegant street photography for publication and commercial clients across the world, creating timeless art in his set-up. In his case, he uses the power of a combination of a Hasselblad medium format camera, top-of-the-line optics, a rental rig, plus a mix of art tools, including Photoshop software to see his visions come to life. But while all these tools are crucial to the creative workflow, the right camera is often missed. With our new Photofly app and a new focus on the capture of brilliant creative photography, we're helping photographers capture the trip of a lifetime, and create a collection of memories that will last forever.
